Introduction

This adventure is a rewritten version of The Tomb of Aghyar, a GURPS adventure I wrote and originally ran in 1988 for the secondary group of players in my campaign<sup>1</sup> set in the Frontiers of Alusia setting. It was rewritten and expanded for my Christmas 2007 Savage Worlds game, and ended up stretching out over 2008, too.

The players variously included N.A.B. (one of the original players from the primary group of players in the original campaign), his son T.A.B, my daughter L.B., and my nephews and niece T.A. E.A, M.A., B.B., and D.B. The youngest, who joined the game in 2008, was 6 when we started playing it.

Five sessions<sup>2</sup> were eventually played during Christmas 2007, on Saturday 2007/12/23<sup>3</sup>, Wednesday 2007/12/26<sup>4</sup>, and Thursday 2007/12/27<sup>5</sup>; the next year in the summer on Friday, 2008/07/04<sup>6</sup>; and then again at Christmas of that year on Tuesday, 2008/12/23<sup>7</sup>, when we finally finished the adventure.

I expanded the adventure from my original and the actual play reports linked probably above have the most details about the additions. Maybe someday I'll find the rest of my notes and write this up more completely.

Wildcards are marked with a d6 symbol: , symbolizing their wild die.

Background

Arrival in Seagate

Need to figure out what date the characters arrive.

The characters arrive in Seagate from the North by ship (the Wavefollower) on ???. They change their money on Coin Street, at a fee of 5 percent, and find rooms in the Foreign Quarter of Seagate (at the cost of 200 pennies per month).<sup>8</sup> As they move about the city they find that everybody is talking about a group of adventurers who have apparently been the cause of great trouble in the city: their house exploded, someone tried to burn their merchant ship (and did burn a local wharf), they're blamed for subsidences in the streets and dead bodies floating from the sewers. And one of them seems to have a demonic cast to his appearance sometimes. Everybody seems glad that these trouble magnets are soon to leave the city, under the orders of the Count of Carzala. If the characters talk to people about this other group they find out that they are hiring mercenary soldiers and engineers!

Aghyar

In 728 A.E. the pirate Aghyar was entombed with his treasure somewhere along the shore east of Smuggler's Hook and west of the fishing village Skilkarsi, a section of coast about 120 miles long, under or near one or more standing stones. Some legends say that he had himself entombed alive when he knew that he was close to death, others say that his tomb is cursed, but all say that the tomb contains his fabulous treasure. Aghyar's tomb has never been found.

During his life he reaved and smuggled everywhere between the shores of Carzala and the beaches of the Northern Counties, and was feared by all the coastal village for his violence and his habit of abducting able-bodied men to crew his pirate ships. His fleet of pirate ships make him incredibly wealthy, and all this wealth was buried with him in his tomb. He had a son who was also a feared pirate and often sailed with him, but the son died in the North shortly before his father's death, which his father never learned.

Setup

One moonlit evening the characters are walking along Dim Lane when they see in the intersection with Breakneck Way which they are approaching (about 100 yards away) a fleeing figure attacked by two dark-clad figures. The prey stops momentarily in the intersection and engages in a brief fight with his two attackers, killing one and then fleeing down Dim Lane away from the characters, followed by the surviving attacker. A couple of seconds later six more dark-clad figures boil out of the other branch of Breakneck Way and follow the chase. The whole scene takes less than time than it takes the characters to reach the intersection.

The struggling figures are about 100 yards away. Make a Notice roll to hear running thieves approach.

<sup>8</sup> One truesilver guinea (oval) = 21 gold shillings, 1 gold shilling (round) = 12 silver pennies, 1 silver penny (oval) = 4 copper farthings (octagonal).

The Parchment

Common Knowledge with a -2 to remember tales of Aghyar the Pirate. The sage has Knowledge (History) d10. Roll once for each item on table.<sup>9</sup> If the sage succeeds on the Wygg entry he'll remember Wygcliff.

Opposition

Travelling

Halfway to Wygcliff the characters are ambushed by eight members of the thieves guild, one of which is a Master Thief.

The Village, Wygcliff

Yggshow, the Hill of Wygg

The Tomb

Hazards

Falling Damage.

Savage Worlds, Revised falling damage is 2d6+5 points per 5" (10 yards) fallen, with a maximum of 2d6+50. Savage Worlds Explorers Edition falling damage is 1d6 per 10' fallen.

The Tomb

1. The Entrance.

Cooperative Strength roll (+1 for every success and raise, unlimited, see Savage Worlds, Revised p. 56).

2. The Shaft.

Handholds are slippery and crumbly, so make a Climb roll with a +2 every 10" (20 yards).

3. The Pit.

Trap: Spiked Pit.

4. The Guardroom.

Originally Skeletal Ogres, now Skeletons.

The skeletons attack when anyone disturbs a skeleton.

Note

The PCs found 10 skeletons.

5. The Resting Place of Aghyar.

Originally Skeletons, now Skeletal Ogres.

The skeletal ogres attack when anyone disturbs a skeleton or the crypt.

Aghyar the Undead attacks anyone disturbs him, or when the sword is taken.

<sup>9</sup>[I'm not sure what happened to the table. I'll have to check the original adventure.]

Maps

Original Maps

The map for this adventure was directly inspired by the map in the adventure “The Crypt of Ockless” on page 23 and 23 of the “Scenarios Book” of the Avalon Hill RuneQuest 3 boxed set Griffin Island, by Rudy Kraft, Jennell Jaquays, and Greg Stafford, published in 1986. I'm sure the reason my map has both a side view and a top view is the map from another scenario in that book, “Ancient Orc Tomb” on pages 38–42. I got this book when it came out, and it and the boxed version of RuneQuest 3 were the only RuneQuest books I had for a very long time. I found them fascinating, but never found anybody who wanted to play RuneQuest. I was not familiar with the original version, “The Crypt of Elkoi”, in Griffin Mountain, until I picked up the version republished by Moon Design in 2001, Volume II in their “Gloranthan Classics” line. “The Crypt of Elkoi” is on pages 87 and 88 of that volume. The original version of “Ancient Orc Tomb”, “Troll Tomb”, is on pages 235–238 of that volume.

My original 1988 maps were drawn on graph paper with pencil, then traced with with colored pens.

Redrawn side view and top view map

I redrew the map for the 2007 version in SVG using Inkscape, adding the Ooze Room and expanding the size of the rooms. This version was a side view, and I showed the original 1988 version (in black) and this first expanded version in green.

Expanded with Dungeon Tile Maps

The kids and my brother enjoyed the adventure, so I expanded the adventure, adding more rooms, and redrew it using some Wizards of the Coast tiles and the online map maker for them.

|--------------------|-----|----|
| Altar / Floor      | 1x2 | x1 |
| Skull Pile / Floor | 1x1 | x1 |

I redid the Ooze Room using the Dungeon Tiles, but otherwise it is the same as the Ooze Room from the revised map.

One reason I completely replaced the lower level is because everyone seemed to be having fun and wanting more. I also had another player for the later session, so I decided to introduce him by having him locked in time in one of the new rooms, for the other PCs to rescue. He was inside the red circle in the red square in Room 2.

Unfortunately, I don't seem to have the notes for what was in the rooms on the expanded map! I may have just scrawled them on a piece of paper rather than adding them to this document.
